HON. MANASSEH SOGAVARE
PRIME MINISTER

OMBUDSMAN BILL 2016

EXPLANATORY MEMORANDUM

Part 1 deals with preliminary matters such as the short title, commencement and interpretation. Three important concepts are defined – “administrative conduct”, “prescribed officer” and “prescribed body”. These are important because the Ombudsman is empowered to investigate the administrative conduct of a prescribed officer or body. Section 97 of the Constitution already lists a number of offices and bodies that fall within the scope of the Ombudsman’s functions. The new definitions extend this list, including by listing contractors of prescribed bodies. The definition of administrative conduct also extends to conduct of a prescribed body by employees, contractors and agents of the body.

Part 2 provides for matters related to the Ombudsman. Clause 7 requires a newly appointed Ombudsman to vacate certain offices before exercising powers or performing functions as Ombudsman. This expands on the existing requirements of section 96(3) of the Constitution, which prohibits the Ombudsman from performing the functions of certain other offices, but does not require the Ombudsman to vacate those offices. Clause 8 allows the Ombudsman to enter into an arrangement with a public body for the purpose of carrying out his or her powers and functions.

Part 3 provides for matters relating to staff and finance. This is a key part of the Bill that significantly changes existing administrative arrangements by establishing:

- a formal administrative structure to support the work of the Ombudsman, by establishing the Ombudsman’s Office as a government agency with its own budget
- formal requirements for adequate staffing of the Ombudsman’s Office
- a mechanism for appointing authorised officers to conduct investigations

Part 4 deals with the requirements and procedures for complaints and investigations into the administrative conduct of prescribed officers or bodies.

- Division 1 allows a person who is aggrieved by the administrative conduct of prescribed officer or body to make a complaint to the Ombudsman. The Ombudsman is required to keep a register of complaints.

- Division 2 specifies how the Ombudsman can deal with a complaint. There are 3 options:
  1. The Ombudsman can dismiss the complaint without investigating it if any of the following circumstances apply:
    - there is insufficient information to investigate and the complainant has not responded to a request for further information
    - the complaint is vexatious, frivolous, misconceived or lacking in substance
    - the complainant does not have a sufficient interest in the complaint
    - the Ombudsman is satisfied the subject matter of the complaint can be dealt with informally
    - the complainant has an alternative avenue to deal with the conduct complained of
    - another complaint has been made about the same conduct that has already been dealt with by the Ombudsman
    - there has been an unreasonable delay in making the complaint
    - the complaint cannot be dealt with by the Ombudsman because, for example, it is not a complaint about administrative conduct
  2. The Ombudsman can refer the complaint to another body or person if it warrants investigation or action by the other person. The Ombudsman can do this even if he or she is also beginning an investigation into all or part of the complaint. For example, if the entire complaint relates to a criminal offence rather than maladministration, the Ombudsman can refer the entire complaint to the Commissioner for Police and not investigate it. If the complaint involves some conduct that may be a criminal offence and other conduct that may be maladministration, the Ombudsman can refer the relevant part of the complaint that may involve a criminal offence to the Commissioner for Police, and start an investigation into the conduct that may be maladministration. This ensures that all or part of a complaint does not “fall through the cracks” simply because it does not involve maladministration.

3. The Ombudsman can begin an investigation into the conduct complained of.

Before deciding how to deal with a complaint, the Ombudsman may (but is not required to) conduct preliminary inquiries.

- Division 3 deals with the procedures for conducting investigations. The Ombudsman may begin an investigation in response to a complaint, in response to a referral from a member of Parliament or on his or her own initiative. The Ombudsman must inform a person whose conduct is being investigated of the investigation and invite the person to provide a written response to the relevant allegations. The person can also be compelled to provide information in writing or by way of oral examination. The Ombudsman may conduct the investigation personally or by using one or more authorised officers. Authorised officers are given powers of entry and seizure. The Ombudsman may refer any matter that comes to his or her attention during an investigation to another body or person if it warrants investigation or action by the other person. This does not prevent the continuation of the investigation. After an investigation is completed, the Ombudsman must prepare a preliminary report. An officer or body whose conduct was investigated has the opportunity to respond to the preliminary report before a final report is prepared. The final report must be given to the officer or body, as well as the Minister responsible for that officer or body, the Prime Minister and the complainant (if any). The Ombudsman may later request a report on the implementation of any recommendation made in the final report from the officer or body and make a further report on the implementation. The further report must be tabled in Parliament.

Part 5 provides for confidentiality, privileges and protections in relation to investigations. Any obligation of secrecy that may otherwise apply to a prescribed officer or body is removed for the purposes of an investigation. However, disclosure of information is not required if the information is Cabinet confidential or if the disclosure would be contrary to the defence, external relations or internal security of Solomon Islands. The Division also includes provisions creating an offence for disclosure of confidential information by the Ombudsman, an authorised officer or a staff member of the Ombudsman and protecting those persons from liability for things done in the course of discharging their functions.

Part 6 creates offences of providing misleading information to the Ombudsman or an authorised officer, impersonating the Ombudsman or an authorised officer and obstructing, threatening or influencing the Ombudsman or an authorised officer.

Part 7 provides for miscellaneous matters, such as power of delegation and to make regulations. It also includes a provision specifying that an investigation by the Ombudsman into conduct does not affect any other action taken or required to be taken in relation to the conduct.

Part 8 repeals the Ombudsman (Further Provisions) Act (Cap. 88) and provides for matters necessary to enable the transition from the repealed Act to the new Act.
